AI Supply Chain: GPU Architecture Optimization Given Memory Shortage and Supernode Challenge

Our checks indicate Rubin Ultra may adopt tiered HBM spec to balance supply, cost & workload requirements; shorter testing times could ease near-term capacity constraints.

GPU: Hardware Configuration Optimization

1. HBM de-specification – investors cross-checking whether this is true:

- We think Nvidia's Rubin Ultra will feature several SKUs with high-end version adopting HBM4e 8Hi lower-end versions using HBM4 12Hi or 8Hi. Based on discussions with memory coverage analysts, we see this reflecting: 1) HBM capacity shortages, 2) cost pressures, and 3) optimization for different workloads based on memory capacity requirements.
- Nvidia should make final decision before end-3Q26. We continue to gather feedback on the performance impact of changes to HBM specifications. Our checks suggest HBM de-specification will have a more meaningful impact on decoding than pre-fill workloads, particularly for long-context-window LLMs.
- However, reducing memory content per chip may increase overall chip shipments, boosting volume-driven suppliers. We do not rule out major ASIC projects adopting different HBM configurations for similar reasons.

2. Kyber server rack delays with no concrete timeline, while inter-rack CPO connectivity remains Nvidia's preferred direction:

- We believe Nvidia's (analyst: Joe Moore) long-term vision for AI server racks is maximizing compute capacity/GPU density and rack-level performance, with GPUs interconnected through scale-up architectures for LLM training & large-scale inference. Since 2023, we have seen the transition from Hopper HGX (8-GPU, or NVL8) systems to Blackwell NVL72.
- To further increase GPU density per rack, Nvidia first disclosed its Kyber blade server design at GTC 2025. However, given ongoing PCB and thermal challenges, first-generation Rubin Ultra server racks will likely continue to use the Oberon solution for NVL72 while adopting CPO/NPO technologies to enable NVL576-scale deployments.
- We remain optimistic about Nvidia's adoption of CPO as a key differentiator in scale-up performance versus China's supernode architectures (see below).

3. China AI supernodes – Chinese AI GPU vendors are adopting NPO rather than CPO for inter-rack connectivity

- To support larger LLMs (>2tn parameters), Chinese GPU vendors have also introduced supernode architectures. These racks connect through NPO (near-package optics), as local GPU SerDes speeds may remain at 100Gb/s per lane due to foundry process constraints. See: AI Networking: Scale-up Technology Enables China's AI Supernodes \(27 Jul 2026\).

ASIC – TPU Update

- MediaTek guided that it could achieve a 15–20% share of the ASIC market in 2027, broadly in line with our preview and Joe's assumption that MediaTek could secure a 20% revenue share in TPU programs. That said, MediaTek believes its revenue share could increase further in 2028 alongside the ramp-up of 2nm TPU products.
- Separately, GUC indicated at its recent analyst meeting that it is interested in providing TPU compute die back-end design services for future TPU generations.

2027 GPU/ASIC Total Power Consumption

Strong Google TPU demand: In our previous MediaTek report, we highlighted upside from Google TPU demand, which is driving strong revenue growth for KYEC in both 2026 and 2027. We now forecast total TPU shipments of 3.7mn units in 2026 and more than 7mn units in 2027. We estimate TPU-related business could contribute 7–8% of KYEC's total revenue in 2026 and slightly more than 10% in 2027, including final testing and a portion of chip probing revenue.

In addition, MediaTek's TPU is expected to adopt burn-in testing for its 3nm AI ASIC. We believe this reflects a broader industry trend, with AI chips increasingly requiring burn-in and longer testing cycles to ensure performance and reliability.

Strong Google CPU demand too: In our previous GUC report, we noted that the upgraded demand outlook extends beyond Google TPU to include Google CPUs. We now forecast Google CPU shipments of 1.5mn units in 2026 and 3mn units in 2027. Our checks also indicate that Google's CPU programs require burn-in and system-level testing, which we estimate could contribute 3–4% of KYEC's 2027 revenue.

In summary, we now forecast Google-related demand will account for 10–15% of KYEC's total revenue in 2027, including TPU, CPU, final testing, and a portion of chip probing revenue, versus 8–10% of total revenue in 2026.

Exhibit 1: Strong TPU shipments could contribute >10% of revenue in 2027

Implied chip volume vs. electricity consumption (GW) frequently discussed, suggesting power supply remains a global bottleneck

We published our latest report, Asia-Pacific Technology: Connecting Dots: HK investors' feedback on Asian semis \(9 Aug 2026\), yesterday. During our recent Hong Kong marketing trip, investors questioned whether power infrastructure can support our projected 2027 CoWoS-implied chip volume of approximately 19mn units. Assuming an average TDP of 2kW per GPU/ASIC, the installed base would require roughly 38GW of power capacity.

Conversely, when SpaceX indicated plans to expand its computing capacity from 2GW by the end of this year to nearly 10GW under an ambitious scenario (see SpaceX: Strong Beat/Outlook vs. Higher Capex), investors also asked what this would imply for TSMC's CoWoS capacity consumption. Notably, Adam Jonas models only 3GW of incremental computing demand, reaching 5GW by the end of 2027. As a rough illustration, the additional 8GW implied by SpaceX's target would equate to approximately 4mn Rubin GPUs, or roughly 20% of the AI accelerators that TSMC could produce in 2027.

Aligning Blackwell and Rubin Chip Shipments with HGX and Rack Shipments

We analyzed Blackwell chip shipments versus rack shipments in our last June AI tracker. We believe TSMC's Blackwell chip output, based on CoWoS-L capacity, aligns more closely with underlying demand as reflected in AI capex trends.

We now incorporate HGX systems (8 GPUs per server) into our chip consumption model and assume that nine HGX servers are equivalent to one NVL72 rack. We forecast 5.4mn Blackwell units in 2026, with chip supply sufficient to meet Grace Blackwell NVL72 demand by 2H26.

Our latest checks also suggest shipments of nearly 7mn Rubin and Rubin Ultra units in 2027, while total Rubin NVL72 rack shipments could reach 90k units in 2027 (Exhibit 14).

All Blackwell chip "inventory" has proven to be supply-chain buffer stock and should be fully absorbed by 2026. As a result, we see little reason for concern over inventory levels. We expect Rubin to follow a similar pattern. Rubin should begin ramping in 3Q26, with rack shipments starting in 4Q26.

STOCK RATINGS

Morgan Stanley uses a relative rating system using terms such as Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated or Underweight (see definitions below). Morgan Stanley does not assign ratings of Buy, Hold or Sell to the stocks we cover. Overweight, Equal-weight, Not-Rated and Underweight are not the equivalent of buy, hold and sell. Investors should carefully read the definitions of all ratings used in Morgan Stanley Research. In addition, since Morgan Stanley Research contains more complete information concerning the analyst's views, investors should carefully read Morgan Stanley Research, in its entirety, and not infer the contents from the rating alone. In any case, ratings (or research) should not be used or relied upon as investment advice. An investor's decision to buy or sell a stock should depend on individual circumstances (such as the investor's existing holdings) and other considerations.
